This mural project is a great example of bringing people together through an art experience! We had a large and diverse group involved in this project -- everything from city and county officials who set aside their political differences to work toward a common goal, to professional artist Mollie Graybeal sharing her experiences and expertise with high school student-artists. The student-artists represented a wide cross-section of our community, including both lower and upper income levels, some multi-generational locals as well as some recent immigrants with limited proficiency in English, for whom we provided a translator so that they could fully experience the joy of creating art. Through our collaborative efforts, a drab and dreary industrial building at one entrance to downtown was transformed into a colorful, vibrant wall of interactive murals creating a true sense of place and revitalizing pride in our shared hometown.
